

Message from Dr. Fuhr

After some nudging from a fellow instructor and to satisfy my own curiosity about this phenomenon we know as Facebook, I signed up for my own page and had one developed for Activator Methods. Within moments, I received a substantial number of emails, some from familiar names and some unknown, and I saw our fan base for the Activator Methods page expand just as quickly. What I like about websites like Facebook is that their social networking approach enables me to be reminded of all the amazing doctors out there who are using the Activator Method to heal patients every day. Preparing for seminars, engaging in research and development, and managing a hectic travel schedule can be consuming, but my growing Facebook network is the perfect example of how far-reaching awareness is for our technique, and how many wonderful doctors are dedicated to improving lives with the Activator Method. I salute each of you for your efforts, and if we haven't already, I hope we can connect via Facebook soon!

Access featured research on Facebook

Activator Methods has joined the Facebook revolution by posting its own fan page. Not only will visitors find information about upcoming events and resources to support chiropractors, the page also features a dedicated tab for accessing research. On a regular basis, the Activator Methods page will highlight a particular research paper or case study and provide an easy link to the entire Activator Methods online research library. To learn more, log on to Facebook and search "Activator Methods International."

Activator introduces spring 2010 seminar schedule

Positive feedback on the new curriculum in the Activator Methods Intermediate and Advanced fall seminars continues to pour in! For doctors who are unable to attend a seminar this fall, Activator Methods has unveiled its new 2010 spring seminar schedule. Registration is open for seminars in 16 cities from Honolulu to Newark, with the spring season officially kicking off in January.
